THE TRAILS OF THE AIRPLANE, DOG, AND TRACTOR PARTIES CRISSCROSS THE ANTARCTIC IN A VAST SPIDERWEB

More than 450,000 square miles of this bleak continent and surrounding waters were explored or mapped by the expedition. Elevations along the airplane routes were made by reading the altimeter as the skis skimmed the ice surface in these spots—a new method of obtaining heights in such areas. The large scale insert shows the Alexandra and Rockefeller Mountains, definitely located and surveyed by the expedition. Many newly discovered geographical features have been named for the first time on this map.
